Preamble

Technological development in the digital space requires a questioning of the traditional concept of governance. This requires working on developing policies, adapting the legislative framework and revising procedures. In addition, it is necessary to develop infrastructure in the field of information and communication technologies to achieve e-governance and digital transformation, which are among the modern means of managing and strengthening citizen participation in decision-making, and which are adopted by many countries.

This international seminar, through in-depth research and studies, aims to highlight the opportunities available for implementation, leverage international experiences, define appropriate and effective strategies to achieve e-governance and digital transformation, and to examine the role of actors, experts, universities, institutions and various entities in the field of digitalization with a view to achieving a knowledge-based society.

Problematic

During this seminar, a set of objective questions relating to electronic governance and its relationship with digital transformation will be addressed, explaining the political, economic and legal dimensions, as well as the issues and challenges imposed by the digital world. countries and their security, from an interdisciplinary perspective.

Obiectifs

This seminar aims to address strategies for achieving e-governance and digital transformation from an interdisciplinary perspective, drawing on the expertise of global institutions in the public and private sectors, with a view to developing digital infrastructure and to establish legal and regulatory rules to govern the secure use of modern technologies, and to raise awareness throughout society, from all these categories, of the benefits of secure use of these technologies, thus ensuring the preservation of their privacy and their identity while reinforcing the values of digital citizenship.
