Preamble:

The African Sahel region is experiencing serious geopolitical transformations, manifested primarily through the decline of French influence and the penetration of new international powers and actors, in addition to the security crises accompanying the new wave of military coups, as well as the growing role of mercenaries and private military companies, which has led to the emergence of serious repercussions that are not Not only on the security situation in the African Sahel region, but also on the regional neighboring countries.

Algeria is one of the countries that shares vast land borders with the Sahel countries, which makes Algerian national security more vulnerable to penetration, due to the cross-border nature of the security threats and risks emanating from this fragile region at the security level.

In light of these new challenges facing the Sahel region, the decision-maker in Algeria must formulate a coherent strategic vision that will make Algeria able to position itself within the map of the new geopolitical balances in the region in a way that guarantees national security and the national interests of Algeria

Problematic:

This forum attempts to address the following problem: To what extent do the new geopolitical transformations taking place in the African Sahel region affect Algerian national security? What are the options and mechanisms that Algeria can rely on to protect its national security in light of the repercussions of the new geopolitical landscape in the Sahel region?

Importance:

The topic of the forum is of great importance as it deals with research and analysis of the repercussions that the new geopolitical transformations in the African Sahel region have on Algerian national security, as well as highlighting the options and alternatives that the decision-maker in Algeria can rely on in dealing with these challenges and the new geopolitical balances in the Sahel region, including It guarantees Algeria's interests and national security.
